The Human Rights and Social Justice Research Institute Survey are conducting an online survey entitled "Understanding equality and human rights in relation to religion or belief". The deadline for submitting your views is Friday 15 July 2011 – there has been very little notice for the survey.

The survey will give you the opportunity to voice your opinions on the conflict between rights to manifest your religion and GLBTQ legislation. You can cite case examples personal or generic and give practical proposals on how the rights of religious people to manifest their religion in public and the work place can be protected.

The survey will take you about 15 minutes or so. I would suggest you write the answer to question in a Word document and then paste it into the response box. You then have a record at the end of your responses.
